

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. There was an immediate change to our families home life when the new law went into effect. We can actually finish an entire meal without unsolicited interruptions regarding credit cards, insurance, or mortgages. We would receive over 6 calls every evening, up to 9pm at night. These would often interrupt not only dinner but our family time of reading books and our daughters bed time routine. There are plenty of other ways for companies to advertise to me without interrupting me and demanding my immediate attention. With mail, TV, or Radio ads I can choose to give them attention or not and choose when to give them attention. The only way to do this with phone solicitors is to not answer the phone or pay for caller ID. My family does not wish to do either. Every evening that passes without the need to hang up on someone I am thankful for our the Indiana's state legislatures work in this area.
